A gala The World Of John Neumeier was held on Sunday, February 24, at Grosses Haus Staatsoper–Hamburg.

The 4-hour gala consisted of John Neumeier's story about the love of his life – ballet. His native company of Hamburg Ballet, students and world stars including Alina Cojocaru, Alessandra Ferri, Manuel Legris, Laetitia Pujol, Artem Ovcharenko, Olga Smirnova, Roberto Bolle, Guillaume Cote performed fragments from his productions from different years.

The choreographer's favourite artists Ivan Urban, Alexander Ryabko, Anna Lauder, Edvin Revazov, Silvia Azzoni, Carsten Jung were on stage that evening.

Famous pianist and conductor Christoph Eschenbach played a piece by Schumann in one of the fragments. Among guests there were Jürgen Rose, Brigitte Lefebvre, Nikolai Khubbe, Laurent Hilaire, Elisabeth Platel, Reed Anderson, Thomas Dieter, Karen Kain and many others.

The message of congratulations from Russian Prime Minister Dmitry Medvedev to John Neumeier, February 24

Vladimir Urin handed John Neumeier a message of congratulations from Russian Prime Minister Dmitry Medvedev:

“Moscow, February 24.

Dear Mr. John Neumeier!

Please accept my congratulations on your 80th birthday and my best wishes.

As a prominent choreographer, you are rightfully considered a daring experimentalist, a true wizard of dance. You managed to create a special realm – the realm of John Neumeier’s ballet that for many years has continued to delight millions of people all over the world.

Classics and modernity, vivid artistry, plastique and dancing solutions are naturally combined in your remarkable productions. Every performance is not only an unusually poetic choreography but also a particular drama of characters where very different emotions and experiences are expressed by the language of dance. The dance speaks volumes about the story of human feelings making the audience thoughtful and compassionate. The Swan Lake, Nijinsky, The Lady of the Camellias, The Seagull, Anna Karenina, Tatiana have all become masterpieces of ballet art.

I wish you health, inspiration, well-being and new and interesting projects and premieres.”

About choreographer Kasyan Golejzovski and his Coppelia at the Bolshoi – in Kommersant Weekend “The invitation of Kasyan Golejzovski to stage Coppelias by Delibes at the Bolshoi in 1941 seems an inexplicable happenstance/ ... In spring 1941, after several years of despondency and occasional work somewhere on remote national borderlands, the leftist experimentalist and formalist, advocate of on-stage nakedness returns to the rehearsal rooms of the Bolshoi. His long absence played a blissful role. Golejzovski was out of sight and the last memory the authorities have about him was that he made a good showing at the recent Tajik Art decade in Moscow. We may suggest that the “smuggling” of Golejzovski was done under a typical ballet excuse – the theatre desperately needed a “new edition” of Coppelias by Alexander Gorsky that had been running on stage since 1900s.”

The artistic director of Ballett Zurich Christian Spuck speaks about the Bolshoi Theatre and Russia in an interview to Kommersant-Stil:

"What are you fond of in Russian culture, art, history?"

"I come to Russia often and I am genuinely excited about the country's cultural heritage. ... I take every opportunity to see the Bolshoi performances — and not only for their artistic merit. Being at the Bolshoi you feel how important the ballet is for Russian culture, how meaningful and loved it is here — perhaps like nowhere else in the world. I think a lot about the link between culture and religion that is close enough in Russia. Taking a wider angle, I was always charmed by the contrast between Russians seemingly cold and detached when you first meet them and their heartfelt—warmth and sincerity when you get in closer contact. Russians have a big heart and Russia is the country I always feel at home in.

“In Toulouse, you will conduct your two main orchestras, the Capitol and Bolshoi. Is it easy to switch from one to the other?”

“Now I’m used to it! And I’m also a guest conductor around the world for many other orchestras. Of course, the Capitol and Bolshoi are different in terms of tradition, heritage, sound ... Their main common point is the practice of opera, their lyrical dimension. And their requirement. I find them very complementary. Besides, the things I’m looking for here with the Capitol, I always try to introduce them there. And vice versa.”

“19 performances are planned as part of the first Franco-Russian Musicales. In addition to tomorrow’s Berlioz concert, Tugan Sokhiev will lead the Bolshoi Orchestra and Choir, as part of Great Performers, with Tchaikovsky’s The Queen of Spades on Thursday, March 14, and Ivan the Terrible by Rimsky-Korsakov, Friday, March 15th.” [In the opera The Maid Of Pskov — ed. note]

Bolshoi Mourns the Loss

Tragic news came from Latvia on February 26. Andrejs Žagars has passed away.

Andrejs Žagars, October 16, 1958 – February 26, 2019

Andrejs Žagars was the director of Latvian National opera in 1996–2013. He made his debut as a stage director for opera in 2002, he staged operas in Latvia and other countries and took part in international festivals. His works include Carmen, Lady Macbeth of Mtzensk, Nabukko and Il Ballo in Maschera.

Andrejs Žagars was born on October 16, 1958 in Siberia where his parents lived in exile. He grew up in Cēsis, graduated as an actor from theatre department of Latvian State Conservatory, played roles at the theatre and cinema.

He featured in 13 films including The Long Road In Dunes, The Match Will Be Held Regardless Of The Weather, Life Of Klim Samgin and others.

The theatre bloomed under his direction. He had created the first summer festival, kick-started careers of Kristine Opolais and of world famous Latvian conductor Andrejs Nelson (now musical director of Boston Symphony Orchestra).

He was the project manager of Big Ballet and Big Opera at Rossia-Kultura channel, had twice brought Riga Opera to Moscow and hosted the Bolshoi at his theatre, including Eugene Onegin and The Children of Rosenthal.

The director was awarded the People’s Friendship order for enhancing cultural relations between Russia and Latvia.

The Bolshoi mourns and expresses its sincere condolences to friends and family of the outstanding actor, director and theatre worker of Latvia Andrejs Žagars.

Director General Vladimir Urin expressed condolences on behalf of the Bolshoi Theatre (Novosti Kultury on Rossia-K channel, 19:30)

Russian Minister of Culture Vladimir Medinsky announced full-scale changes awaiting Russian theatres in the Year of Theatre. This is about the 44th federal law on state procurements. Medinsky announced: “The creative process and state procurements are incompatible. It is impossible to auction a director, to replace an actor, to buy costumes and stage settings by the gross. It is not only about altering the 44th federal law but also about possibly carving theatres and other cultural institutions out of standard goods and services procedures. The carving can be done in various ways,” Moskovsky Komsomolets reports. This includes the suggestion to free theatres from the obligation to purchase author’s and related rights and to increase tenfold the one-supplier purchasing limits for cultural institutions.
